Dear Swiss citizens and friends of Switzerland,

I hope you all had a relaxing summer holiday. Summer can be beautiful in Beijing, but it is also a busy time for diplomacy! My colleagues and I at the Embassy and Consulates-General worked closely with our Chinese counterparts to organize high-level exchanges, strive for common objectives in the interest of both countries, and further bilateral cooperation.

May to August was a productive period for bilateral exchanges, particularly in the fields of environment and development. Prior to a recent visit by Swiss Vice President Doris Leuthard, Swiss National Council President Christa Markwalder attended the Sino-Swiss Dialogue at Guiyang's Eco Forum in July. In addition, the Sino-Swiss Low Carbon Cities project was successfully launched in five Chinese cities.

These exchanges are very fruitful in the sense that we have reached consensus to further consolidate our collaboration in a number of domains related to sustainability. Switzerland is without doubt a world leader and pioneer when it comes to sustainable development. We prioritize sustainability on our political agenda and have developed both theoretical knowledge and practical experience. Under the newly established Sino-Swiss Innovative Strategic Partnership, we are ready to explore new avenues for cooperation with China's public and private sectors.

Deepening bilateral exchanges have also furthered Sino-Swiss economic relations. Swiss delegates had productive discussions with its Chinese and international counterparts on financial markets, international economic, and monetary system reforms at the G20 Finance Ministers meeting in Chengdu. This July marks the second year of the entry into force of our landmark Sino-Swiss Free Trade Agreement, which remains the only FTA between China and a continental European country. While our trade numbers keep growing despite a difficult economic environment, Swiss companies remain very attractive to Chinese investments, as the recent take-over announcement of SR Technics by the Chinese group HNA proves.

Last but not least, as the cultural exchanges between our two countries continue to bloom, please don't forget to follow and participate in our events and activities including design workshops, jazz concerts, winter sports, Italian Language Week, and much more. Whatever your tastes, there is something for everyone in our rich cultural program!

Jean-Jacques de Dardel

Ambassador of Switzerland to the People's Republic of China
